

Fraser McDonald

Fraser has over thirty years experience working with the not-for-profit sector. His interests include management, governance and leadership, mission and strategy development, as well as team work and conflict resolution.

As a psychologist, he focuses on relationships, recognition and rewards and mentors community group leaders.

Fraser was raised in the South Pacific, with Tongan and Samoan grand parentage. He came to New Zealand as a scholarship student and still today enjoys working with new migrant groups and diversity in organisations.

He holds/has held leadership roles in:

- New Zealand Volunteer Service Abroad
- Migrant Support Services
- Industrial Social Services
- World Safety Organisation.

Fraser also teaches in the Unitec Diploma in Not-for-Profit Management.

CV and referees are available on request.
